

CHARITY TILT LIKELY TO DRAW BIG CROWD MONDAY AFTERNOON

Andalusia A. A. and All-Stars

DIAMANTI PESSIMISTIC
Andalusia Gridders Will Be Out-Weighed and Have Strange Field

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Dec. 31—Joe Diamanti, coach of the Andalusia A. A. gridders, voiced the outcome of the big charity game between his Green Wave outfit and the Lower Bucks All Stars to be played on the Bristol High School field Monday afternoon, with an air of pessimism.

At least that was the attitude he took toward the outcome of the game insofar as his team is concerned. He issued this statement last night in spite of the fact that his team, he declared, was in "prime" shape for the battle even though they haven't had any practice for the past three weeks, he said.

Diamanti expressed this pessimistic view of the contest upon the basis of two important conditions neither of which are in any way advantageous to the A. A. squad. And yet both may play a prominent part in the ultimate outcome of the tilt. The most significant of the two is the vast difference in weight under which the Green Wave is at a terrific disadvantage for the All-Stars will outweigh the Bucks County champions by at least 25 to 30 pounds per man. This severe handicap may be a hill too steep for the Diamanti-coached lads to climb. The other barrier the champions must hurdle is the difference in playing fields. Heretofore, the Andalusia gridders were used to a "mattress" field, which is the extreme contrast to the field upon which this tilt is to be played. They will be hoping from a "bed of roses" into a "bed of rocks" which may have a bad effect upon the players who may be easily susceptible to injury and thereby put some of their stars on the sidelines.

Among the more prominent stars studding the Green Wave line-up for this tilt are Bill Junghans, rated by some as the best end in the entire county; Jim Cunningham, rated the best second year man; red-headed Bob "Brick" Chapman, a freshman find, who cavorts at the snapper-back post in fine style; Ed McFarland, converted center into an all-around back, who stars in every way; Ed Efling, a plugging back; and Bob Lange, brainy quarterback, who seldom carries the ball himself, but does plenty of blocking for his teammates.

Diamanti has announced as his probable starting line-up with Roberts and Junghans at ends; Trommer and Vogel at tackles; Farina and J. Cunningham at halfbacks.

Residents Here Plan To Celebrate The New Year

Residents of this section plan to appropriately celebrate the dawning of a new year. A large number of parties have been planned for the occasion.

Celebrations will be staged at a number of lodges and clubs here and restaurants are anticipating big business.

Motorists are cautioned about driving after imbibing in intoxicating liquors. They are advised to either have others to drive them or leave their cars at home.

A number of the churches will hold Watch-Night services.

New York Heiress
Weds Hugh F. Noall

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 31—Eleanor Hepburn Fisk, New York heiress, yesterday married Hugh Fraser Noall, British actor and singer. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. Paul Smith, Lamberville Baptist minister, at the home of Artist Charles Childs, in Lumberville, near here.

The bride's socialite mother, Mrs. Pliny Fisk, who broke up the couple's wedding plans five years ago, sent her blessing from New York, as did Mrs. Noall's two brothers and sister, who are in New England.

High School Building Not To Open Tuesday

The Bristol high school building will not open on Tuesday morning as scheduled, due to the fact that the installation of oil burners in the building has not as yet been completed.

All teachers, however, are to report Tuesday morning for further instructions, but none of the classes of the elementary or high school grades will be in session.

Students are requested to watch the Courier for announcement of the dates on which their classes will be resumed.

CROYDON WOMAN DIES IN PHYSICIAN'S OFFICE

Mrs. Michael Sutton, 73,
Succumbs to Cerebral
Hemorrhage, Here

A NATIVE OF GERMANY

Death came suddenly this morning to Mrs. Elizabeth Sutton, 73, of Croydon, as she was receiving instructions from a physician after undergoing an examination in his office here.

Death was caused by a cerebral hemorrhage, according to the certificate issued by Dr. James Lawler, deputy coroner of Bucks County. Mrs. Sutton, who according to her family had been receiving treatment in Philadelphia for diabetes, decided it would be more convenient to engage a physician in this vicinity. She therefore, accompanied by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. George Sutton, went to the office of Dr. H. Doyle Webb, Radcliffe street, this morning. She was receiving his instructions at about nine o'clock when she was seized with a sudden attack and died immediately.

The deceased was the widow of Michael Sutton, and is survived by six daughters and five sons. She made her home at State Road and Girard avenue, Croydon.

A native of Germany, she came to the United States 57 years ago, and for 16 years made her home in Croydon.

STATE GRANGE REPORT

LANGHORNE, Dec. 31—Middletown Grange members participated in an enjoyable Christmas party in the Friends school house, Wednesday evening, with Mrs. Henry C. Pickering in charge.

During business, Henry C. Pickering gave a report of the State Grange sessions, held in Washington, Pa., a few weeks ago.

The music committee directed the members and guests in the playing of games and the singing of selections appropriate to the Christmas season. These features were followed by an impressive candle lighting service, during which the lecturer, Mrs. Henry C. Pickering, told the story of the sacred flame.

At the conclusion of the meeting refreshments appropriate to the season were served.

The next meeting of the Middletown Grange will be held in the Friends' school house on Wednesday evening, January 11, at which time officers elected several weeks ago will be installed.

Almost Incredible

Washington, Dec. 30 IT IS pleasant to be in tune with the Christmas spirit, but if one is not wholly allergic to facts it is a little hard at the moment to dwell convincingly upon the general subject of peace and good will on earth. The truth is that in no peaceful period has there been more ill will in the world than exists today.

THE propaganda mills through which national hatreds are kindled are running full blast. Nations recall their Ambassadors and viciously spit at each other. Issue Murder Warrant Canon City, Colo., Dec. 31—A warrant charging murder was issued by authorities today against Dr. Ray L. Atterbury, 40, an osteopath, in connection with the sensational strangulation slaying of his attractive wife, Nona Atterbury, 31-year-old prominent Canon City clubwoman.

The warrant was signed by Mayor Holmes, Jr., Freemont county coroner, after the coroner received a report from Dr. Francis McConnell, noted Denver criminologist, who helped send Anna Marie Hahn, petson murderer, to the Ohio electric chair.

Thinks Girl Knew Abductor

Kingston, Dec. 31—The father of pretty 19-year-old Margaret Martin, Kingston stenographer, whose slaying body was found beneath an isolated bridge in the mountains in Wyoming county, today believed that his daughter was abducted by "Someone we all know."

The slain girl's father, a mine foreman and local political leader, told police that his daughter was much too cautious to accept appointments with strange men.

"That's why," he declared, "we believe this man is someone she had seen before and whom we all know. She left the house without eating breakfast."

To Discuss Spanish Armistice

London, Dec. 31—An armistice in the Spanish civil war will be discussed by Premiers Chamberlain of Britain and Mussolini of Italy when they meet in Rome, January 12th, the Daily Mail today said it learned in Rome.

It Duce plans to press three points in his talks with the Briton, said the Mail:

1—Granting of belligerent's rights to the insurgents.
2—Rigid assurances that neither France nor any other source will assist in supplying arms to the Barcelona government.

3—A truce in the Spanish civil war under conditions guaranteeing that no Bolshevik or other extremist form of government be established in any area on the Mediterranean coast of Spain.

In return, said the Mail, Mussolini will offer to recall all the remaining Italian Legionnaires now fighting with the insurgents, said in Rome to number 15,000.

CHRISTMAS DISPLAY IS VERY ATTRACTIVE

Many View Exhibit at Home of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard
Fenton, Hayes Street

IS VERY COMPREHENSIVE

A week's effort in arrangement of a Christmas display has well repaid Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Fenton, and their children, at their home, 319 Hayes street, for much pleasure is secured by not only the family, but friends as well, in looking over the few thousand pieces that comprise the setting.

Features in the 8x14-foot village, which occupies most of the space in one room at the Fenton residence, include: A fox hunt, a farm scene, rodeo, amusement park, an army encampment, a hangar with its fleet of planes and dirigibles with some in the air and some grounded, an animal band with heads of the "musicians" keeping time with the music, a fleet of fire engines and ladder trucks en route to a house-fire where the chief awaits them; a school house with pupils at play on the school-ground; garage with its fleet of new cars arriving and with new cars in the display room; a church with the preacher on the steps; and many other minor displays.

What attracts many who view the little village are the old-fashioned pieces, some of which were purchased 20 and more years ago. Old-time baby coaches, furniture, motor-cycles with side cars, and carts of metal; as well as countless tiny vehicles made of wood and bearing all manner of burdens, are included.

A Christmas tree, brightly decked, is placed beside a stairway at one end of the display, and at the top of the stairs is Santa Claus ready to descend.

The regiment of soldiers is before two tents, and some of the cavalrymen are shown. A flood-light enables the soldiers to search the air for pieces of aircraft which hover near. The fox-hunt is most complete with the red-

Newportville Sunday School Conducts A X'mas Program

NEWPORTVILLE, Dec. 31—The Sunday School held a Christmas entertainment in the church basement on Thursday evening. C. Burnley White, superintendent, announced the program. Prayer was offered by Richard Schlafer, student pastor.

The primary group directed by Mrs. Dewees, sang several songs; and Marion and Ruth Matlocks pleased with a duet.

Mrs. Kohler's class gave a play entitled "Come any time." These taking part: Dorothy Gehrmann, Mary Jane Given, Alice Walters, Betty Konkin, Thelma Hart, Ella Potts. Between the acts Frances Matlocks sang two selections.

Then Santa Claus arrived with his pack, and passed out gifts to members of the cradle roll and primary departments. Each member of the Sunday School received a half pound box of chocolates.

Auxiliary Tenders Party To Newportville Scouts

NEWPORTVILLE, Dec. 31—The Ladies' Auxiliary gave the Boy Scouts and Cubs a Christmas party on Dec. 23. Scouts and Cubs exercises were followed by each Scout reading two verses of Luke 2:1-16, then singing Christmas carols. The party was then turned over to the Ladies' Auxiliary. The president, Mrs. Gehrmann, offered a prayer, followed by the entire group singing Christmas carols, with Mrs. C. Clausen accompanying. A recitation, Christmas, by Mrs. Clausen, was enjoyed. The Scouts and Cubs presented each mother and each member of the Auxiliary with a Yule log. Mrs. Clausen surprised the Scouts and Cubs by showing interesting pictures of England and Germany taken during September.

Santa Claus distributed books from the Auxiliary and handkerchiefs from the Scout Committee. A penknife was presented to Cub Sampson for perfect attendance, and dues paid for the year. Refreshments were served.

Parents and friends attending were: Mr. and Mrs. J. Gehrmann, Mr. and Mrs. R. Loper, Mr. and Mrs. Sampson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Becker, Mr. and Mrs. W. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Kulp, Mr. and Mrs. C. Clausen, Mr. and Mrs. Munchback, Mr. L. Clark, Mrs. N. Muth, Mrs. C. Everett, Mrs. H. Backhouse, Mrs. Hogarth, Mrs. Sammler, Mrs. Reitter and the Misses E. Raven, T. Hart, R. Gehrmann, L. Roth.

LIVING CHRISTMAS TREE

Chorus Members Form "Decorated Evergreen" and Give Selections

A merry Christmas spirit pervaded the Travel Club home yesterday afternoon, on the occasion of a Yuletide party, which was featured by the appearance of Lisbeth Boyz Borie, well-known for her charming poems. Numerous guests were invited to participate in the festivities, and found arranged for their entertainment and enjoyment, carols sung by a chorus forming a "living Christmas tree," readings of her own "homey" selections by Mrs. Borie, special instrumental and dance numbers, distribution of gifts, and a social period during which refreshments were partaken of.

The hostesses, Mrs. Armand V. Morris and Mrs. James R. LaRue; the member in charge of the program of the day, Mrs. Roy Tracy; and members of the committee named for the occasion, had most tastefully decked the club room in red candles, holly, greens, bouquets of red and silver flowers, and tiny trees. In this setting two hours delightfully and quickly passed as one surprise number followed another.

A greeting by the club president, Mrs. Earl Tomb, was followed by brief business, Mrs. Tomb telling of being present the day previous at the luncheon in Philadelphia when Mother Moore was presented with the Gimbels award.

Taking charge of the program, Mrs. Tracy presented the Christmas tree which was formed by 10 members and friends of the club, each row being elevated more than the one in front of it. These women, garbed in green, held in their hands lighted candles, and garlands of red, festooned with colored balls, thus making the decorations for the "tree." This chorus sang "Silent Night" and "Joy To The World," accompanied by Mrs. Albert Dowden, pianist, and Archie McLees, violinist. Participants in the chorus were: Miss Winifred Tracy, Mrs. Harry T. Neher, Mrs. George Wiedeman, Mrs. William Duhamel, Mrs. Carl deGanahl, Mrs. George J. Irwin, Mrs. Walter Pitzenka, Miss Jane Boswell, Mrs. E. Linton Martin, and Mrs. George Boswell.

Miss Kitty Helwig favored with two piano solo: Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Sharp Minor, and "Scottish Tone Picture" by McDowell.

Introducing her two sons, Peter and David, through her poems, Lisbeth Boyd Borie read many selections from her books of poems. These delightful verses of childhood as affected by everyday happenings, gave interesting insights on the Borie boys and on childhood in general. Among the selections read yesterday in charming manner by Mrs. Borie, were: Soon, Only Just Me, Sorry Simon, Greaty Granny, Mummy, Lucky, Daddy Knows Best, Three Things To Do, The Peter Family Tree, My Tapoca Table, Pillercats, Spankings, Excused, Too Salty, Sniffs, Naps, Baby Talk, How I Know.

Turning to a more serious vein the writer gave: Rain, Voices, Soon On The Snow, Breakfast On A Train.

Sleigh-bells introduced during the playing of "The Skater's Waltz" proved most appropriate to the day. This selection was played by Miss Winifred Tracy, piano; and Mr. McLees, violin.

A tap dance by "The Holly Girls," the Misses Betty and Mary deGanahl, in red and green holly costumes, was much enjoyed, the recorded accompaniment being "Walking In The Winter Wonderland." "The Holly Girls" later distributed the gifts to the gathering, after the playing of selections from "Babes In Toyland" (Herbert) by Miss Tracy and Mr. McLees.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1938

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

"Happy New Year!" Shout it! Mean it! Make it a forecast, not a mere mind wish! There is really no good reason on the first day of January, 1939, for any good American to give way to dreary forebodings.

Thirty-eight was a good year for the great majority of the American people. There were bad spots in it. There were accidents and tragedies but these were localized and sporadic. The rest of the world, viewing disinterestedly said, "America is rich and prosperous and powerful and free."

So much for the basis of happiness for the past. We have a right to go into the New Year in a happy frame of mind. Many of the happenings that seemed unfortunate have proved to be lessons learned to our advantage. The traditional optimism of our people persists. We know how to say, "There will be more jobs when spring comes. Trade will pick up pretty soon." The average American is optimistic and believes better conditions will prevail during the next six months.

The natural will to believe in the better condition, coupled with the demonstrated power of public opinion is the source of America's tremendous influence over the world. During the last year a remarkable proof of the efficiency of American democracy was given.

This offers assurance to the many who, as the New Year dawns, are disturbed over the threat of war. The will of the American people is for peace. That will must prevail.

So, with confidence welcome the New Year and proclaim it "Happy!" Good will and faith are powerful agencies in bringing wishes to pass.

PENALIZING POWER

The Mexican government's placing of a new 10 per cent tax burden on the power industry would be a dash of straight comedy, if it were not an almost certain prelude to further confiscations.

A major cause of the power industry's distress in Mexico has been government's paternal attitude toward power consumers. Between 37 and 40 per cent of the current consumed is not paid for. The companies have been denied any remedy in the courts. They can not refuse to service consumers who will not pay their bills. Theft of current is general and well known, but there are no prosecutions.

As the new tax is levied on the consumer, government will now have to choose the alternative of collecting taxes on bills which the courts have held to be non-collectible, or holding officially that a default is routine from taxation.

Of course government could insist that all power consumers now pay their bills, or in default, face prosecution for taxes. But this is a tall price for the main idea, namely, to give power the works.

The skeptics at the next meeting will examine a few down realities on the off chance of finding one that is not such.

"ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY" by E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

SYNOPSIS

The grave issue of world war or peace was in the offing (though none seemed to realize it) when one Fergus, a secret British messenger, was assaulted and robbed en route to Sir Ronald Matresser, who had just returned to his lordly county estate after another of his long and mysterious journeys. His mother, Countess Matilda; his sister, Lady Ann; and her new companion, Mademoiselle Elisabeth Stammer, a beautiful Austrian, welcomed the handsome young Matresser scion who recalled seeing the alluring Elisabeth on one of his trips abroad. . . . Dr. Andrews and Matresser, motoring late at night to the former's surgery to see Fergus, narrowly escape a smashup with a speeding auto. Fergus is semi-conscious and does not know that the message he was carrying has been stolen. He mumbles about seeing a young woman bending over his coat in the hospital. . . . The next day, Dr. Andrews tells of a new patient—"a perfect giant of a fellow, a Dutchman" named Jan Van Westheene—who was slightly injured when bringing his yacht into Matresser's private harbor the night before. A conversation with Elisabeth on European affairs puzzles Matresser. She is now addressing him as his concern grows.

CHAPTER X

"We should never be enemies," she told him softly. "We have both of us too much the spirit for right living. All that I ask of you just now is that you remain a little tolerant. Do not think of me as even a possible enemy. That could never be. Talk with me sometimes. Please try to know me a little better. I have no evil thoughts in anything I do but the greatest passion in my life is my love of my country. If something should occur which made it possible for me to help her, I should do it, but I would do nothing to harm anyone like yourself under whose roof I am living."

Her last words, although in a sense consolatory, left him with a faint sense of uneasiness which lingered with him more or less throughout the day. Nevertheless, he performed flawlessly his duty as host to a very distinguished gathering of sportsmen.

Later, in the library of his suite, Matresser found waiting for him the man whom he had often declared in various places to be the only person he had ever known in any walk of life who had never made a mistake.

This paragon of secretaries, the invaluable Henry Yates, was manipulating a noiseless typewriter with incredible speed, using the fingers of one hand only, when his employer entered. Yates rose to his feet at once. He was a small man, frail, with short brown beard streaked with gray and wore thick spectacles.

"Good evening, Henry," Matresser greeted him as he took up a position on the hearth rug with his back to the log fire. "Heaps of news for you. Anything happened here?"

"A note from the gentleman who arrived in the harbor during the storm of last night," Henry Yates reported. "You would like, perhaps, to glance at it yourself."

Matresser drew a blue sheet of note paper from the square envelope which Yates handed to him, and read the few lines.

Yacht DAPHNE.

My Lord:
A stranger driven into your harbor by distress of weather would esteem the honor of paying his respects to you at any suitable hour.

Faithfully yours,

JAN VAN WESTHEENE.

"Foreign trick, that, isn't it?" Matresser remarked, tapping a cigarette against his case.

"I suppose it is a foreign habit, sir, to call first upon any person of distinction. In any case, I thought you might like to see him. I ventured to tell him six o'clock."

"Excellent."

"Furthermore," Yates continued, "I noticed through my glasses at luncheon time that the yacht is flying the ensign, which apparently is out of order as van Westheene is not a member of the Squadron or the Royal Thames Yacht Club."

"He must be a bit of a seaman," all the same," Matresser observed. "All the more so if the yacht is a chartered one. I saw him bring her in himself last night. That reminds me, Yates. You will have to look out for yourself. Seems to me we are drifting back into prehistoric times. You heard part of my conversation with Sir Francis Tring last night. Someone had a whack at that poor chap who is lying at the doctor's with concussion. Someone near here too. He was carrying a letter to me which is missing."

"I understood, of course, that something of the sort had happened," Yates acknowledged, "but I was hoping that the letter itself would turn up. Have you any idea of the nature of its contents, sir?"

"Not exactly," Matresser admitted. "I fancy that Tring is coming down. The most disquieting thing is that it should have happened at all. Who can there be in this neighborhood who is spying on us?"

"Has your lordship inquired into the credentials of Mademoiselle Stammer?" Yates ventured.

Matresser nodded frowning.

"I am in rather an awkward position about that young lady," he admitted. "Apparently she is here as a sort of companion to my sister, her credentials are official and beyond dispute. She may be working for France, as I daresay she is, and I will admit that we are not quite ready to take France into our whole confidence on certain matters, but that will all be explained so soon that I do not want any trouble. You know how anxious I am that not a soul in our household—"

"Will you pardon my interrupting," Yates begged, "but the situation is perfectly clear to me. I think it would be unwise to interfere with the young lady in any way. She will be continually under our observation and I do not look upon her as a possible source of danger."

"You mean," Matresser remarked, "that she may be more useful than dangerous to us now that she is under surveillance. Besides, in the present instance it is quite impossible that she could have committed a personal assault upon the messenger."

There was a knock at the door. A footman appeared ushering in a visitor.

"Mr. van Westheene to see your lordship," he announced.

Matresser stepped forward with a word of welcome. Henry Yates, from behind the typewriter, ventured to gasp. The visitor was a man considerably over six feet and a half. He was splendidly proportioned and, although his fair hair and short pointed beard were streaked with white, his tanned complexion gave him the appearance of extraordinary health and vigor. He carried a stick in his left hand, however, and limped. His monocle glistened.

"I have the honor of addressing the Earl of Matresser?" he said, holding out his hand and bowing in severe military fashion. "It is very good of you to receive a chance visitor."

Again at the touch of the man's fingers—cold, hard and with a grip suggesting neither cordiality nor friendship—Matresser felt that wave of dislike sweep over him. There was something of evil both in the man's expression and bearing. The smile which was meant to express courtesy, was an unpleasant contraction of ill-shaped lips. Even Matresser, whose natural bearing was so entirely courteous and distinguished, felt some difficulty in receiving his visitor suavely.

"Very happy to make your acquaintance, Mijneer van Westheene," he replied formally. "My secretary and I were just speaking of your skill in handling your boat last night. No easy waters, ours, for a stranger."

"I have encountered worse," the Dutchman confided. "In Sweden, where I often cruise, the currents are not only difficult but dangerous. Matresser indicated an easy chair and seated himself opposite.

"I must apologize for fixing so late an hour for your visit," he said. "I have just returned home after a somewhat prolonged absence and we have had a fairly large shooting party here today. I was sorry to hear from our local doctor that some of your men got knocked about in the storm."

"Nothing serious," the visitor assured his host. "I myself am a slight toss. This I may explain," he added, touching his foot with his stick, "is not a permanent—what is the word?—infirmity. Your little doctor soon set us all to rights. An amiable person anxious to get back to his sport, I think."

"He is a good chap, Andrews, and a country doctor gets a pretty dull time of it. You shoot yourself?"

"I have some thousands of acres preserved on my own land," the other admitted. "I do not often shoot, however. I prefer the sea."

Matresser looked over his shoulder to where Yates was seated, an immovable figure, behind his machine.

"Ring for Burrows, will you, Henry?" he enjoined. "What can I offer you, sir—a cocktail, sherry, whiskey?"

The Dutchman beamed.

"It would give me great pleasure to drink a cocktail with you. You say that you have just returned from abroad?"

Matresser nodded.

"I have been out of the country for some time."

"It is good to travel now and then," his caller observed. "I understood, or did I see it in your newspapers, that you have been big-game shooting in Africa?"

Matresser more fully nodded and changed the subject, remarking: "A handy little ketch that of yours. I had a good view of her while I was shaving this morning."

"She is of the type usually built in my own country," van Westheene confided. "A craft of that sort does not make much speed but it is very good in rough weather. My engines need attention, otherwise I am very well satisfied with the way she stood the storm. I must wait a few days until this swell goes down, then I think I shall probably extend my cruise."

"Rather an unusual season of the year for this part of the world," Matresser observed.

"I shall go southwards. If the weather should be propitious, perhaps you would care for a sheltered cruise one day. Your car could meet you anywhere you chose."

Matresser's smile carried with it a world of meaning which only Yates was able to appreciate.

"My dear fellow," Matresser said, "I would not trust myself on board for anything in the world. The fact is, I love the sea but I am a rotten sailor. You will find this cocktail pretty good," he added, turning to his guest. "I have really, as Yates himself knows very well, not enough work for a secretary but every time I hint as much, he makes a fresh cocktail and when I have drunk it I know I can never part with him."

"Mixed, shaken and poured out too, with one hand," van Westheene remarked, with a note in his voice which was probably as near sympathy as he was ever likely to get. "You type also with the same disadvantage," he added as he accepted a beautifully frosted glass.

"It was the war, perhaps—yes?"

"It was the war," Matresser acquiesced. "He would not tell you so himself—infernal modest fellow he is—but he was a great little man in those days. I believe that he possesses more medals than anyone else in the house at present."

"You were yourself engaged with, or about?" Van Westheene asked politely.

"I went out with the Yeomanry, a branch of the service which was hopelessly muddled up at the commencement of the war. We were too large a force to form an independent unit and after we were disbanded they scarcely knew what to do with us. They took me on in the artillery at last, but it was a dreary business. If you stay here long enough, Mijneer van Westheene, would you care for a small shoot one day, or a larger one perhaps next week?" invited Matresser.

"Any form of shooting would give me great pleasure," the visitor assented. "I have weapons of a sort on board and I would dispatch a man to Norwich in search of the requisite ammunition."

"I beg that you will do nothing of the sort," Matresser protested. "We can fit you out with anything you require here."

The caller accepted another cocktail, holding his glass with steady fingers until it was completely filled.

pamphlet to be prepared for distribution among the residents so they could have information about the costs per property owner. The pamphlet has never been prepared, however, since Common Council never really decided just how it wanted to proceed. A request was submitted for Federal funds when Council was first urged to make it, as some of the members expressed belief the deadline could be extended.

There are hundreds of families in Morrisville today who are advocates of a sewage system and want to see Council take steps to procure this improvement in some manner. They declare if the State Authority plan is the best, Council should look further into this set-up.

Advocates of the improvement have also mentioned group meetings in various sections of the borough with a view to informing Common Council of their desires in the matter.

The Great Game of Politics

hostile powers gaining military bases in South America from which to threaten us; that it is vital, not only for our trade but our life, to arm. The other school, whose views were recently voiced by Senator Bennett Clark, of Missouri, regards the drive for a greater armament as whipped up by hysteria, insists that if we mind our own business, we will be perfectly safe and that to spend huge sums upon increasing our military and naval strength in order to resist an entirely chimerical and utterly improbable attack, is sheer idiocy.

WHEN the situation as a whole is considered, not only in Europe but here, the conviction seems unavoidable that we are headed straight for another general conflict from the consequences of which no country can escape. However, there are at least two great, outstanding facts to weigh against the wild accumulation of armaments and the great increase in national bellicosity. In the face of these facts, it is almost incredible that, as things look, the ultimate calamity will happen. Should it occur, certainly the belief that the human race is superior in intelligence to the beasts will no longer be tenable. It will be proof of the utter incapacity of mankind to sustain a civilized society; complete repudiation of the idea that the race has progressed.

THE first of these facts is that in no country do the people want to fight; in every country, among the people—and this, of course, includes Germany—there is an intense desire for permanent peace. No one disputes that. Whatever the kind of government under which they live, however truculent their leaders, whatever the character of their neighbors, the people want peace. They may not know how to preserve it, but they want it. Of that there is no room for doubt. The second fact is, that, as every thoughtful man knows, another war means ruin for victor and vanquished alike. Neither the economic nor social structure of any great nation can sustain the strain of another world war. A general collapse would occur, a period of chaos ensue. There isn't any doubt about that either.

AS an example of the struggle to keep afloat, even now, the extraordinary rise in the cost of the social services, which includes the dole, pensions, etc., in England, is cited—a cost which in the form of taxes pervades the whole of British economic and industrial life. According to the London Times, in 1910 this cost was 63,000,000 pounds yearly; in 1926 it had risen to 383,000,000; in 1937 the cost was 523,000,000 pounds, or over $2,600,000,000. These figures make one realize that at Munich Mr. Chamberlain was not only comparing his country's military strength with that of the threatened enemy, but looking at the balance sheet as well, with full appreciation that another general war means the end of the economic system

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL

They touched your heartstrings when they sang "Thanks For The Memory" in "Big Broadcast of '38." After they had sung it, the country took up the words and sang it too. "Thanks For The Memory" . . . of motor trips, and burning lips and burning toast and prunes . . . How lovely it was. "They" refers to Bob Hope and Shirley Ross, whose rendition of that song inspired the new romantic comedy, "Thanks For The Memory," which opens Sunday at the Bristol Theatre.

In this new comedy, Bob and Shirley are seen as newlyweds, struggling to make their way in the world despite their friends, who think that every night is party night at the home of the newly married couple. As the story unfolds, their friends make it difficult indeed for Bob to settle down and write the Great American novel in addition to his daily work as a salesman.

The bars of habit and decorum are down at the Bristol Theatre this week. Audiences are hissing, cheering, booing and stamping their feet as "The Terror of Tiny Town" unfolds his various pieces of chicanery. With the honor of the fair heroine at stake, with cattle rustling and murder and stagecoach holdups occupying the screen, Bristol Theatre audiences are reveling in one of the most delightful full length comedies ever produced in Hollywood.

A cast composed entirely of midgets enacts Columbia's newest film. A novel experiment in film making, "The Terror of Tiny Town" is a pot-pourri of stock western situations, with the final thrilling ride ending in a terrific hand-to-hand combat, a dynamite explosion and the death of the super-villain.

James Dunn, whose portrayal of breezy, dare-devil young heroes has become a standard for motion pictures, brings the newest of these to the screen of the Bristol Theatre this week in "Shadows Over Shanghai," a dramatic story of espionage and conflict in war-torn China of today. He is seen as a young news photographer who marries a beautiful White Russian girl so that she may escape on an American passport, and finds himself risking his life several times to protect her and ends up by falling in love with his own wife.

The story itself deals with the difficulties encountered when the girl tries to leave China bearing an amulet which is the key to release a huge sum of money in San Francisco for war supplies—with her opposition coming from the Japanese espionage system and a guerilla organization headed by a former Soviet commissar.

Murder strikes on a musical cue in Mr. Moto's latest case—one of the most unusual angles ever woven into the amazing sleuth's mystery assignments.

Four times during "Mysterious Mr. Moto," latest in the 20th Century-Fox series, opening Sunday at the Grand Theatre, assassins strike with terrifying suddenness and each time the same "death tune" is the signal for their lethal deeds.

Considerable research was required before a suitable melody was found, declares Director Norman Foster. It had to be light enough to mask its menacing purpose and catchy enough to be unforgettable.

With the help of the star, Peter Lorre, Foster combed the studio music department until an old favorite, "Mardi," by L. E. De Francesco turned out to be just the thing.

Joe E. Brown in "The Gladiator" with June Travis, Robert Kent and Man Mountain Dean, the bearded blemish of ring fame, will be the attraction at the Grand Theatre Monday and Tuesday.

Departing from his customary characterizations, the cavern-mouthed comedian, in his newest offering, portrays the role of a scientifically-created superman. Those who read Philip Wylie's novel of the same title will remember the humorous circumstances under which "The Gladiator" was launched on his college misadventures.

Brown, returning to Webster College as a sophomore, is beaten and bludgeoned on the football field in the spirit of good clean fun when he attempts to impress Miss Travis, the belle of the campus. That night the Professor who owns the boarding house where Brown resides selects Brown as the unwitting subject of an experiment to increase the human normal strength many-fold. The experiment works.

From that point on the story of "The Gladiator" is as amazing as it is amusing, picturing Brown as a virtual one-man Olympic team and a co-ed favorite from coast to coast.

MORRISVILLE CAGE TEAM HAS BRIGHT HOPES FOR SEASON

Will Open the Season Tuesday Night With Alumni As Opponents

Loss of Last Year's Stars Will Be Severely Felt By The Team

MORRISVILLE, Dec. 31 — The chances of Coach John Hoffman's Morrisville Bulldogs' court quintet finishing at the top of the heap again this season in the Lower Bucks basketball race look mighty bright as his passers round rapidly into condition, in preparation for the opening tilt of the new campaign against their Alumni, Tuesday evening.

And in Bulldogdom they have reason to believe that they may repeat their league laurels won last year for they have no less than six veterans of the '38 combination again stalking the wooden ways this season. Plus that they have a number of fine prospects from last year's J. V. outfit coming up to fill the few vacant spots on the varsity, all of which are left open on the second team.

Only four of last year's varsity array departed from the premises, two of which were regular starters, while the other pair were first string substitutions. However, the loss of Captain Bucky Wallace and Red Reitzle, guard and center respectively, will be severely felt by the Bulldogs this season. Wallace was perhaps one of the steadiest and calmest players in the loop last year, and he could handle the ball smoothly and was a sharpshooter from all angles of the court. Reitzle did not attain stardom until late in the campaign after the eccentric center had been previously dropped from the squad but later taken back upon promise of good behavior. It was he who almost single-handedly beat Bristol in the playoff at Trenton with his sensational pivot shots. The other duo to graduate were Charlie Foster, a forward, and Alex Rusecky, a guard, both of the second team.

These four spots, plus two others to complete the varsity squad of 12, will be taken, more than likely, by upcoming stars from last year's J. V. aggregation. They include Bill Talone and Pinkey Fisher, forwards; Ed Harrison and Jess Huggins, centers, and Bill Provost and Red Thorn, guards. All look promising, with Talone and Provost as the most outstanding at the present time.

This sextet will all understand the six returning stars who will compose the first team. Among them are Jim Yeager and Andy Gavin, a pair of guards from the '38 team, who are perhaps the most outstanding two of the six to return. Both are good shooters and can handle the ball and pass well.

There are also Bill Wilson, Bill Wilnot and Albie Johnson, all forwards, who saw plenty of action last year and are due for even more this season and with an added year of experience, they should go places together for the 1939 campaign. Art Baehr, big substitute center last year, will fill the berth vacated by Red Reitzle. And like the rest, Baehr should improve greatly this season, along with the others who have had that year of experience.

Thus the two guard spots are clinched by Yeager and Gavin with Baehr a fixture at the jump-post. However, the three-corner battle for the two forward positions is still uncertain as all are equal one with the other, and it is most likely that Coach Hoffman may shift the three around often in order to find the right starting combination. Nevertheless, those six, comprising his first team, should provide plenty of trouble and action for other league foes.

The Bulldogs open a tough 19-game schedule on Tuesday, January 3rd, when they oppose their Alumni, and close on Friday, March 3rd, with the Hamilton High quintet as the opposition, away. They will also meet the strong Trenton High team away on January 6th; Immaculate Conception of Trenton, N. J. S. D., and George School, beside Hamilton in home and home series.

TO OPEN BOXING SEASON AT THE TRENTON ARENA

TRENTON, Dec. 31—The 1939 boxing season will be ushered in by Promoter Sammy Perro at the Trenton Arena on Monday, January 2nd, with two eight-round bouts and trio of sixes. Popular prizes will be a feature of this show.

Ralph Ivins, undefeated Jamesburg heavyweight, will step into the windup class for the greatest opportunity of his career, against Nick Young, rugged Philadelphia heavy, who sprang into fame recently by going the distance with Larry Lane in Newark in a tough and close struggle. Young numbers among his victims, Matt Raymond, Tommy Loughran's protegee. This will be the severest test that Ivins has been called upon to face, and if he hurdles this obstacle he will be in a fair way to get fame and fortune, here and elsewhere.

The other eight will pit Stanley Pyontek, heavy-fisted Trenton Pole, against Freddy Fitzgerald, light-skinned New Brunswick Negro. This pair tangled several weeks ago in a torrid struggle, and the fans demanded Perro re-match them.

Heading the sixes is the bout between Larry Mangine, Chambersburg lightweight, and Deacon Cooper, speedy Newark Negro.

Young Jimmy Murphy, former amateur champion, squares off against Red Rice of Bayonne, and Vince Della and Tony Piccinetti, another pair of former amateur champions, clash in the opening six-round setto.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sommerfeld, Monroe street, will entertain at dinner on New Year's Day, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Giron and daughter Lillie, and Mr. and Mrs. George Sommerfeld, Mill street.

ningham at guards; and Chapman at center on the line. In the backfield, he will have R. Lange, Girard, McMahon and R. Chapman. His substitutions include, ends, McClusky, Belinsky and Howarth; tackles, W. Cunningham, Robertson, Roger; guards, Mackin and Laster; and center, McFarland. In the backfield, Carter, Edling, W. Lange and H. Robertson will perform in the substitute role.

Of his entire squad of 24, Diamanti has but two among them who hit the scales above 175. They are Bill Farina, a guard, who goes about 198; and Tiny Vogel, a 200 pound tackle. The team as a whole will average about 155 to 160 pounds.

While the Green Wave has a handicap in weight and also in the playing field, the All-Stars also have their disadvantages, the most important of which is the lack of proper team work. Coach George Dougherty has been experiencing a bit of difficulty in getting his boys out to practice over the holidays. And when they did have their initial workout together last night, all were not there.

However, they will again go through their paces on Sunday afternoon in final preparation for the tilt the following day. Although his starting lineup is very much in doubt at the present time since he is not definitely sure yet whom all he can count upon to play, Dougherty has announced his probable starting array as follows: Pete DeLuca and Freddie "Chick" Kutzer as ends; Ed Morasch and Francis Johnson at tackles; Tom Proffy and Johnny Addis at guards; and Johnny Dougherty at the center line berth. In the backfield, Doc may start Joe Conti at the signal calling post. Bud Schmeley and Howard McLaughlin at halfbacks, and Austin Bono as the line backer. Among the substitutes so far, he has Dunlap and Tony Clone as ends; Carman Gullotto as tackle; Harry McGrath at guard; Joe Tunis, at center; and Henny Addis and Tony Orzai as backs.

He still has two positions to fill with one of these spots being taken by a Recs star yet to be chosen and the other cost likely by a St. Ann's player also to be selected. These choices will be made tomorrow.

Of the five teams from which Dougherty could choose four players, each, two teams (the Morrisville Tigers and Yardley Collegians) declined to place anyone from their respective elevens on the All-Star combination. Therefore, Coach Dougherty had to add extras from the Recs, St. Ann's and the Langhorne Aces from which teams the Stars were selected. The Recs and Langhorne will be honored with six places on the 20-squad team, and St. Ann's, more than likely, will have eight on the outfit since they have seven now and will probably have another
